You might have heard of the term 'bean-to-bar' when it comes to chocolate, but a lot of us do not know what that actually means. 'Bean-to-bar' chocolate refers to the version where the entire process of making a chocolate, right from harvesting the bean to creating sellable chocolate bars, is carried out by the same maker.

Many Indian brands are now taking over the chocolate scene, and creating gorgeous, sustainable, and delicious products.

The world's first zero-waste chocolate, Kocoatrait is a luxury chocolate brand that is all about creating organic and planet-friendly bean-to-bar chocolates. They also make sure that their chocolate making process does not lead to deforestation, child labour, or unethical labour practices with respect to the farmers involved.

This company is all about showing the world that Indian cacao and chocolate is as great, if not better, than the chocolate around the world. From harvesting the beans to making the finished product, they do everything on their own farms. This company was started in Mysore in 2012, and was initially called 'Earth Loaf.' Their philosophy on chocolate is as simple as it gets. The label believes in keeping it natural, raw, and simple. Naviluna doesn't roast their cocoa beans or add cocoa butter to their products. Instead, they work on getting the best cocoa beans and coconut sugar to make their chocolates.

Pascati is an artisanal bean-to-bar chocolate company that was started in 2015 by Devansh Asher. It is now India's first USDA Organic and Fairtrade compliant chocolate brand! The bean-to-bar chocolate makers work closely with Indian cacao farmers and invest in higher-quality, organic products. They usually don't use too many chemical additives, emulsifiers, artificial flavours, or preservatives, keeping the taste as close to the original produce as possible. This is what makes bean-to-bar extra-special.

Have you ever heard about these chocolate makers? If you haven't, perhaps it is time to look for and support more homegrown brands. No better time than now to eat some great chocolate!
